DEA (Ret) Javier Pena and Steve Murphy who inspired the Netflix TV show NARCO's

Speaking Thursday May 26, 2015 at 1:30pm

Although they haven't been official partners since 1994, it's not hard to gauge the rapport between former DEA Agents Javier Peña and Steve Murphy — Mr. Peña is quiet, more thoughtful, Mr. Murphy an energetic West Virginia native with the accent to match. The two men could not have seemed any more unassuming. If you saw them on the street, you couldn't picture streaming-giant Netflix basing a sprawling ten-episode series on their lives.

But then you start to hear their stories. Both Mr. Murphy and Mr. Peña were part of the Search Bloc, an informal task force in Colombia created in 1992 solely to hunt drug trafficker Pablo Escobar. At the time the world didn't even know what to make of Escobar, who in his time would be seen as both a Robin Hood-esque savior and mass-murderer, all while making the Forbes International Billionaire list. Bottom line, Escobar and his Medellin Cartel ushered in the idea of high-production cocaine trafficking, which eventually made its way to our Miami shores. In the years leading to Escobar's "imprisonment" in La Catedral, and the violent 18-months that proceeded his escape, Murphy and Peña played their parts to hunt down and stop the most powerful drug lord in the world.
